

Echoes of a Heart

In twilight's glow, I watch you near,
A distant star, yet crystal clear.
Your laughter, soft as autumn's breeze,
Steals away my heart with ease.

I speak in silence, soft and low,
Concealed where others come and go.
For every glance you fail to see,
A hope remains inside of me.

Your eyes, they chase another light,
While mine still long to hold your sight.
I paint your name in skies of blue,
But in your world, I'm never true.

Each smile you cast, I drink in whole,
A fleeting warmth upon my soul.
Yet love, it blooms on barren land,
With empty dreams and open hand.

I chase the shadows you have spun,
A battle lost before it starts,
Yet here I stand with wandering heart.
A quiet hope, a tender plea,
A dream that fades so silently.

Though you may never speak my name,
My love for you remains the same.